This Is Where It Ends: A Novel about Gun Violence and Sacrifice Marieke Nijkamp's debut novel, This Is Where It Ends, tackles a sensitive topic that has become increasingly relevant in American society. The story is set in Opportunity, Alabama, where the protagonist, Tomás, decides to sacrifice himself to save his friend Sylvia from an abusive relationship. However, the novel takes a darker turn when it delves into the theme of gun violence. Nijkamp's experience growing up in the Netherlands, where she studied history and medieval studies, likely influenced her interest in writing about complex social issues. Her efforts to promote diverse young adult fiction are evident in This Is Where It Ends, which has become a bestseller in 2016. The novel is part of a larger conversation about gun violence in America, with many authors tackling the topic in their works. Examples include Walter Dean Myers's Shooter and Jodi Picoult's Nineteen Minutes. More recently, novels like All-American Boys by Jason Reynolds and Tyler Johnson Was Here by Jay Coles have emerged, shedding light on police brutality and its impact on teenagers. This Is Where It Ends itself explores the dangers of gun violence, with Tomás's decision to sacrifice himself highlighting the devastating consequences of this issue. The novel also touches on themes of domestic abuse and the struggles faced by those who are often overlooked in society. Autumn's father told her that people can't stay in one place forever and that change is a part of life. He said as long as they cherish memories and make new ones, they'll always feel at home. Autumn struggles with knowing who she is and feeling like she doesn't belong. She feels pressure to fail and it's easier to give up than try. The story touches on themes of loss, grief, and the importance of memories. Autumn's girlfriend, Sylv, tries to support her but Autumn is still struggling two years after her mom's death. On the day of Trenton's speeches, the situation becomes chaotic as students rush out of the auditorium. Autumn notices that everyone seems stuck in place, unlike on previous days when they quickly dispersed. Overall, the text sets a somber and introspective tone, exploring themes of identity, loss, and the importance of human connections. The author reflects on their time at Opportunity High School, where they can recite their former teacher's words from memory. However, despite four years of involvement, they feel unprepared for the future. The school's motto, "We Shape the Future," seems inspiring, but the author is uncertain about what the future holds after graduation. The novel begins to explore this uncertainty through the setting of Opportunity High School in Alabama and introduces Claire's sarcastic tone, which contrasts with her later emotional state.
